Merry Christmas

THE WELCOME

No music like Handel, and no angels like us. As he lay in his wrappings of linen and straw. And the ox and the ass could not breathe and stare for the poor creatures never were angels before.
The palace he found was an old cattle stall. With a broken-down roof and a windowless wall. And it looked as if it had been built of stone. But it was made of wood. As well as it could.
A dull stable between two long dark and dim. Was the small bit of moonlight that shined on him. Now it seemed to be beautiful, starry and bright. And it seemed and wept for the death of its light.
But a Lady of Beauty used over his head. While she gathered the strawings about for his bed. And her road was as sweet as a fresh-baked pie. And as white as the foam of a crystal sea.
And her hands did not feel this immovable price. And her breast did not feel the thorn in his eye. On her breast even and safe could the cherub and rest. The lady who was the mother of God.
